

Fuckhead: there's port-a-potties, it's not one either like four like a deck of port-a-potties. And then someone has a car park there on the sidewalk, like partly on the sidewalk. So they're like half blocking the lane. And then they have like a canopy draped over their car and they have just stacks of shit. And then next to it was a dresser, they had a dresser...

Other Fuckhead: Jesus...

Fuckjead: So they had their shoes and a shoe rack. There was a shoe rack like this where they live.

Other Fuckhead: That's really wild. I didn't know also that, you know, when when you see stuff like that on the streets, at least in Los Angeles or maybe in California. That's protected property. Like, by law. You know that? Like if you were not supposed to do that. But but like that's that person's property by law.

Fuckhead: Oh, the homeless person's property protected?

Other Fuckhead: Yes. Absolutely. If you were to go and try to move that or take that, you'd get arrested.

Fuckhead: Yeah. Yeah. Hilarious. But they wouldn't arrest you if you shot somebody. Maybe you should just go and shoot the homeless people.

Other Fuckhead: I like your ideas.

Fuckhead: Yeah. Yeah. Nobody claims it. I mean, nobody does anything about violent crime in LA anymore. It's a fucking joke. Yeah. They're just letting people out.